New Delhi, August 21: India’s apex food regulator is in the process of creating a centralised portal to host the country’s food heritage by inviting states to share traditional recipes.

The announcement was made today at a national conclave titled “Indian Food Culture: Let’s bring the goodness back” organised by the Food Safety and Standards Association of India (FSSAI) to bind stakeholders in this effort.

The conclave agreed to create a framework to preserve India’s food heritage by stressing on five points, principal being the creation of a national recipe archive.

“National Recipe Archive will comprise a dedicated online portal called ‘FOODCAST’ designed to preserve, restore and disseminate traditional recipes of our culinary heritage,” said Pawan Agarwal, FSSAI CEO.
